TASK 1

Admittedly, the foremost objective of playing a sport is to spur goodwill and to alienate inactive lifestyle but some bloodthirsty sports are pondered as nefarious whereby people could undergo the rush of adrenaline. However, I opine that civic bodies ought to outlaw all genre of sports which are considered as dangerous on safety grounds.

Apparently, an imperitive perspective against cruel games is that these are nothing but an excuse of violence.

Some people believe that government should ban dangerous sports even though others claims that they should have the freedom to choose a sport to their liking. To what extent do you agree or disagree.

To be specific, they inculcate viewers to use their fists instead of their benevolent attitudes. To exemplify, in my knowledge, youngsters imbibe wrong messages from these barbaric games and tend to apply on their peers or family members and eventually fall easy prey in the hands of crime.

Protagonists who espouse these brutal sports claim that they want to push the limits of human endurance and athleticism. Also, these dangerous games ^{are} regarded as high-paid sports and consequently, players can earn name and fame. Thai boxing is an epitome of how profitable dangerous sports can be as it has become an important component of tourism in Thailand.

Nevertheless, I still advocate that authorities should stimulate people to engage in highly disciplined sports which are intrinsically valuable and assimilate coordination thus they would spread the spirit of togetherness rather than disaffection.

In conclusion, I would like to stress that even though people should have freedom to encounter any game they like but government ought to implement regulations and inhibit those games which hurt or even kill people.
