

EVEN THOUGH GLOBALISATION AFFECTS THE WORLD'S ECONOMIES IN A VERY POSITIVE WAY, ITS NEGATIVE SIDE SHOULD NOT BE FORGOTTEN.WHAT IS YOUR OPINION DISCUSS.

Admittedly, people have divergent viewpoints regarding globalisation. Some people espouse (support) that globalization has provided a humungous (huge) amount of benefits to developed, developing as well as under-developed nations, while others opine that there are myriad pitfalls of it. This essay will discuss both sides of the spectrum and will reach to a plausible conclusion.

Needless to say, an imperative viewpoint in favour of globalisation is that it has brought job opportunities for every sphere. To be specific, small businesses have a chance to expand globally and it surged the overall economy of the country. On the top of it, it helps in developing good relations between countries which help in international co-operation and peace. What is more, transporting goods over a long distance gives us a plethora of choices. To quote an instance, about ten years ago, we had very few shoe brands like Bata and power but now the market is flooded with Reebok, Nike, Adidas and other foreign brands. Eventually, globalization has transformed the entire world into a global village.

On the downside, opponents do not agree with the aforementioned statements and believe that due to upsurge in tourism, most of the nations have become victims of epidemic diseases, which were only observed in impoverished (made poor) parts of the world. Subsequently, importing goods can have a negative effect on local culture. Japan is an epitome of this where imported food has become more popular than traditional, local produce, eroding (gradually destroy) people's understanding of their own food traditions. Ergo, they lose their individuality and just end up being a copy of someone else.

Summing it up, even though globalization has resulted in some disadvantages, but its benefits can never be ignored. Authorities and natives should see the strong points of globalization and work wholeheartedly (with complete sincerity and commitment) to transform its negatives into positives.
