

In town and cities, the large shopping mall should replace the small local shop. Do you agree or disagree?

Without a doubt, people have divergent viewpoints regarding the replacement of small shops with the large shopping malls. Some are either fascinated by the notion that it is very productive method to get all things under the only one roof. While some are apprehensive about the merits of small shops. However, I am inclined to advocate that this has advantages as well as disadvantages. This essay outlines the both ends of the spectrum in the forth coming paragraphs.

Admittedly, there are plethora of merits of large shopping malls. People can find all sort of things under the one roof. Some people are brand conscious they can found all genres of brands with discount on special days. To quote an instance there on the day Black Friday, malls offered huge discount to sell their products.

Nevertheless, small shops are easily approachable in the case of emergency because they are situated near the residential areas. Buying further, people can purchase products on the cheap prices as they can also do bargaining. A case in point is people purchase things not according to the market price as they can reduce prices.

To core it, I would like to stress that people can explore the benefits of large shopping malls but they can never neglect the importance of small shops.
